

NAVIGATING NARRATIVES

Falling In Love With Reading Again

A World Within Your Hands

Photo illustrations courtesy of Rawpixel

Reading For You!

As students, we are constantly being told, or even forced, to read novels and short stories. Being instructed in this manner can turn us away from searching for books and novels that truly interest us. This push to read from early childhood might even cause students to resent it, making reading unpleasant for some. So, how do you find novels and stories that you can appreciate and enjoy? Novels that can entertain and teach us? Throughout this newsletter, I will walk you through finding that spark to read again!

Finding Your Genre!

Picking up a book with the right genre can make or break your experience with a story or a novel. But how do you know which genre to start with? Well, the answer to this question can be found through trial and error. To get started, you can make a list of what genre movies and TV shows you are most drawn to. For instance, if you are drawn to crime television and movie mysteries, maybe picking up a true crime novel or thriller will scratch that itch. Or maybe you're into more romantic stories; starting and looking through the rom-com or romance section of a library might help you begin your search for a book that truly grabs your attention.

Genre

Photo illustrations courtesy of Rawpixel

What Are Your Hobbies?

What do you like to do in your free time? This can be a big influence on what you would like to read. Maybe you love to paint; you might want to pick up a novel that talks about the different forms of painting or different styles that you could put to use in your own painting style. If you're looking for new ideas within your field of interest, you might learn more about it by reading about how people have succeeded in that field. For example, if you have a passion for becoming a soccer coach, you could read about different plays or read a novel about the success of a famous coach for inspiration.

Growth

Photo illustrations courtesy of Rawpixel

Self Growth

Ever thought you wanted to learn more about yourself? Maybe you're even interested in improving your daily life? Self-help books might be the way to go. You might desire to become more organized and want to know how to consistently organize your things to be more efficient in daily life. Or maybe you want to stop procrastinating on your schoolwork, which would lessen your workload and reduce daily stress and anxiety in your life. Self-help books can help with this. These types of books are designed to capture the attention of people who desire to change their lives for the better and teach them practices on how to do so.

Thank You!

I hope this has made you interested in picking up a book and wanting to read about things that truly interest you, rather than feeling like reading is just a homework assignment.

If you have any questions or would like to contact me for more information on this topic, please do so through the following:

By Lucy Lorenz
Technical Writer and Creative Writer
Email: lucyl@vt.edu
LinkedIn: \(12\) Lucia \(Lucy\) Lorenz | LinkedIn
Number: (804)938-6946

Unsubscribe | Privacy Policy